STEP BY STEP THROUGH THE MASSThe Liturgy of the Eucharist (Part 9)

The small ritual that the priest carries out, whereby he washes his hands is called the Lavabo. The priest accompanies this ritual action with a short prayer which he speaks almost inaudibly: “Wash me, O Lord, from my iniquity and cleanse me from my sin.” As the water is poured over his fingers, the priest quietly recites these words, which are taken directly from Psalm 51 and are also an allusion to Psalm 26: “With the pure in heart I will wash my hands clean, and take my place among them at thy altar, there making thy praises known, telling the story of all thy wonderful deeds.” In fact, in the Old Rite prior to the New Rite of Mass 50+ years ago, the words of Psalm 26 accompanied this Lavabo Ritual. The Lavabo action and words (both in Old Rite and New) reinforce the fact that this action is not about physical hygiene, but about being pure in heart and holy in soul – treating the Holy Things of God in a holy way and with holy fear of the Lord. It is in some way akin to a last little examination of conscience for the priest before he advances any further in the offering of Holy Mass on the Altar.

In the Old Testament Temple times the priests in the Temple would wash their hands in a large bronze receptacle – a ritual which always preceded the act of sacrificing to God – which usually entailed the sacrificing of lambs and other animals. In the Book of Exodus (Exodus 30:17–21), God instructs Moses to make a bronze basin so that Aaron and the other priests could wash their hands and feet before entering the presence of God and offering sacrifice. These Old Testament Priests carried out this washing ritual before their essential task of handling and offering earthly sacrifices in the earthly temple. The Priest at Mass, therefore, handles the Heavenly Sacrifice of the Lamb of God, offered in this Church building but spiritually offered before the Face of the Father on High. The Lavabo ritual marks the transition from the presentation of the offertory gifts to the Eucharistic Prayer whereby the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass reaches its fulfilment. If a Jewish man or woman saw a priest washing his hands or feet, they immediately were alerted that a Sacrifice to God was about to take place. When we see the priest at Mass carrying out the Lavabo Rite then we too are reminded that the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass is about to enter its pivot phase.

After this ritual the priest addresses the Congregation with the words: “Pray, brothers and sisters, that my sacrifice and yours may be acceptable to God, the Almighty Father.” At first this seems like a slightly odd way of wording this exhortation, which is traditionally called the Orates Fratres (Pray Brethren). Next week we will look at these words and the reasons behind the strange turn of phrase: “my sacrifice and yours”.
