Let It Go!

Peter thinks forgiving seven times is generous. Jesus says seventy-seven. Which means: stop counting!

Then Jesus tells a story about a servant who owed a fortune he could never repay. He begged, and the master wiped the whole thing out. Minutes later that same servant found a man who owed him a few months' wages and took him by the throat.

Look at him closely. He has just been handed the gift of a lifetime and he cannot see it. He is so buried in his own materialism, his own rights, his own small world, that the master's mercy has not touched him at all. He walked out of that room exactly the man he walked in. Forgiven, but not free.

That is the danger for every one of us. We can receive God's mercy again and again, in confession, at the altar, and still walk out clutching the old grudge. The neighbour. The sibling. The house. The land. The job promotion. The one who let us down. The First Reading puts it bluntly: resentment is a thing we nurse, and it eats the one holding it. It narrows our vision until, like that servant, we cannot see past the debt.

Jesus ends the parable with one condition: we must forgive from the heart. Not through gritted teeth. Not a cold truce that keeps the old score sheet handy in a drawer. Forgiveness is not pretending the wrong did not matter, but it is a real letting go, deep down from where the grudge lives. And the most powerful thing is that the moment we let it go, we are the one set free. The weight lifts. We can breathe.

So this week, as you receive mercy from God, go and be mercy in action. Name it. Let it go from the heart. Then you will enjoy the freedom God's love has won for us, now and forever.
