Prayer to St. Monica (Feast Day August 27th) – Patron of Mothers

Lord Jesus, you were moved by the prayers and tears of St. Monica and you gave the grace of conversion to St. Augustine her son. Touch our hearts and convert us from fear to love, from sickness to health and from conflict to peace of mind. Bless all mothers, living or dead, known or unknown, married, single or widowed. May their lives, their prayer and their Christian witness draw others to love you. St. Monica pray for all children of all ages who cause their parents to worry.

The Liturgy of the Eucharist (Part 7)

The next small ritual that the priest carries out is known as the Lavabo – which derives from the Latin word for washing. In this ritual the priest has water poured over his hands by a server or he dips his hands into a bowl of water. This is not a hygiene ritual – though perhaps in the distant past it may be begun life as a necessary hand washing. In the distant past (as in some Missionary Lands to this day) not only the Bread and Wine (and offertory collection) are brought forward at this stage of the Mass, but also many other gifts of food, oil, meat or dairy produce are brought forward – often to be distributed later to the poor. This could be grubby business and would have necessitated that the priest, who received these gifts, had to wash his hands.

However, this is not the primary reason or purpose for this ritual. It takes its inspiration from the ritual washing that the Jewish Temple Priests carried out before they offered the sacrifices to God in the Temple. That ritual washing in the Old Testament Law of Moses was mandatory for priests every time they would offer a sacrifice. Its meaning was clearly a physical act seeking to communicate a spiritual reality. It was essential for maintaining the sanctity required to approach God and perform sacred duties. The hands of a person are symbolic of their actions – and so the washing of the hands by the priest in a sense reminded him (and those who witnessed it) that not all his works are good, holy and sinless, since he is a mortal man and therefore prone to sin. However, he washes his hands now to show that they are being prepared to do something good and holy – the offering of sacrifice to God. In the Old Testament, when the people saw a priest ritually wash his hands – they understood that a sacrifice was about to take place. For us at the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, when we see the priest perform this simple ritual which could go unnoticed because it is so brief, we know that the reason for our gathering at the Church at this Mass is now, in a sense, moving up a gear – the Sacrifice of Jesus on Calvary is about to be made present in the here and now of our celebration of this Mass.

The priest accompanies this ritual action with a short prayer which he speaks almost inaudibly: “Wash me, O Lord, from my iniquity and cleanse me from my sin.” It reinforces the fact that this action is not about physical hygiene, but about being pure in heart and holy in soul – treating the Holy Things of God in a holy way and with holy fear of the Lord. It is in some way akin to a little last examination of conscience for the priest before he advances any further in the offering of Holy Mass.
