Reflection: The Life That Is Found

Peter's reaction to Jesus in this Sunday's Gospel seems entirely reasonable. Jesus speaks of suffering and death; Peter immediately says that this must not happen. Yet Jesus tells him that he needs to learn to see differently. That is part of discipleship for all of us. We naturally associate what is good with what makes life easier. Yet some of the best things we do will cost us something: caring for another person, keeping a promise, accepting responsibility, remaining faithful, forgiving. Christianity does not teach us to seek suffering. The cross is not good because it hurts. But neither should we walk away from what is good simply because it is difficult. Saint Paul speaks of allowing our minds to be renewed so that we can recognise what God wants. Perhaps that gives us a useful question for the week ahead: What is the good that God is asking of me here?
