
26th Sunday in Ordinary Time

27 September 2026

Words and Deeds

For the second Sunday running, we find ourselves in the vineyard. This week a father asks his two sons to go and work. One says no, then thinks better of it and goes. The other says, "Yes, sir," and never turns up.

Jesus asks a simple question. Which of them did the father's will? It was the one who actually went.

What we say matters. What we do matters more. Every choice has consequences, reaching further than we will ever know, into our families, our neighbourhoods, and eternity.

Ezekiel puts it plainly. The direction of a life counts. A good person can drift. A sinner can turn. God looks not so much at where we have been as at where we are heading.

The cancel culture of today's world writes people off at the first mistake: one wrong word and you are finished. Christ offers something far better: forgiveness, a real chance to learn, to know better and to do better. He offers freedom instead of shame, light instead of darkness, a way forward, a turn around, and eternal life.

The son who said no was not finished. He changed his mind, and his change of mind changed everything.

Our choices are never purely private. A kind word lifts a household. A broken promise causes chaos and lets a whole family down. And when we cancel someone, we all lose a brother or sister. Saint Paul urges us to have the mind of Christ, who emptied himself in service. His choice to love to the end has consequences for every one of us.

So this week, look at the 'yes' you once gave. At baptism. At confirmation.
Ask: Have we gone into the vineyard? And who might we need to stop writing off?

It's never too late to go. The gate is open, and the Father is still waiting.
